It looks to me like Twitter.com expects a premium high speed connection. As I scroll down the main page (and some other pages) I can see in the Odyssey network window that it keeps sending big video files that I didn't request. There's no way Odyssey (or any browser) is going to keep up with multiple 20-60MB video downloads on my economy broadband connection. Netsurf seems to ignore the videos and doesn't appear to download them but botches the page layout slightly.

Odyssey has a menu to disable image loading but I'd like to see a menu to disable videos (and audio in some cases. My Internet connection is just too slow to handle a bunch of giant video downloads.
