As of right now just one syntax is used. Unless I put multiple in one file, like HTML+CSS+JavaScript. But still keep CSS and JavaScript also separate since the file is identified by it's extension.

Right, that would probably work fine for most purposes.

Not sure how it is done in NotePad++ or VS or similar on Windows, and of course it's always a little disconcerting to have to rely on arbitrary bits of filenames such as extensions - we never had to worry about that in AmigaOS (well, originally, at least 😊).
