The thing is that Mixer.com provides only 720p for recorded videos, but various resolutions on Live videos. twitch.tv provides more resolutions on recorded videos, as well.

With the weighted quality list that I use in my scripts, you can set which will be the first resolution you would like to have. If this is not supported it goes to the next one. If none of the small resolution exist, then it goes to the high ones 720p and 1080p.
