I daren't imagine that ANYONE uses FFS anymore! I haven't used FFS since AFS/PFS was commercially available in the (mid?) 1990s. Journalled filing systems like AFS/PFS, SFS & JXFS are lightyears ahead of FFS in speed terms (e.g. I recall that Quake would load 10x faster when using PFS). And of course having to wait for a multi-GB sized partition to be validated by FFS due to a crash would seem like going back to the stone-age!

BTW, is there a detailed version history of JXFS stores somewhere, which I could use to guage how stable it has become? SFS has a nice juicy one :)
