

---

Subject: : Digital Universe

Topic: : The Dark Rings of Saturn

Re: The Dark Rings of Saturn

Author: : nbache

Date: : 2009/8/14 22:06:06

URL:

@BillE

Quote:

BillE wrote:

You can use the menus, shortcut RA [ and RA ] to change the field of view.

That reminds me; some menu shortcuts are not necessarily so well chosen for those of us with non-English keyboards and/or Locale settings.

For instance, on my Danish PC keyboard, which I use on the A1, the square brackets are on the 8 and 9 keys in the main key section, requiring Alt Gr. So using them as menu shortcuts involves pressing Right Amiga together with the right Alt (Alt Gr) and the 8 or 9 key. Except that Right Amiga plus Right Alt also serve as the keyboard equivalent of the right mouse button! So that is not really possible.

(Luckily it is possible to substitute the left Alt key for the right one and press Right Amiga, Left Alt and 8/9; clumsy, but at least working.)

Best regards,

Niels

P.S. Oh yeah, thanks for the tip about the rings. Awesome display; wish I could see it directly. But Saturn is not visible from here, partly due to its low inclination (currently only above the horizon during the day) and the surrounding buildings and trees, partly because of all the light pollution. And (partly as a consequence of those conditions) I don't have any astro scope.