Having thought more about this since then, I think the tab opened in that way should always be active (this is how Firefox works with external-clicked links). I need to do some tweaking to achieve that. (edit now done)

While I still don't understand what "tab_is_active" means (I suppose it might be the logical inverse of "Open new tabs in background"?), I can confirm that NetSurf's screen now comes to the front in the following two cases:

- * AppDir:NetSurf URL "<http://my.url>" (when it is already running).
- * If NetSurf is running, but I forgot it was, and run it again.
