It does seem to take an age to scan directories, I loaded my work:temp dir which filer loads "instantly" and it took a good 20 seconds to display anything at all.

If Datatypes type scanning is to be used, it probably ought to be on a seperate process that doesn't dold up the normal flow of loading files.

On the other hand perhsp tis is to give the true "Windows Explorer" feel 😞

Also after sorting by type two or three times, only files of the "last type" are retained in the list/ie in a list with 50/60 micelleneous files and 5 ZIP files only the zips remained after sorting. IN a list with a WAV file only the WAV remained in the list.
