Why is it mandatory to set the libz version to a number higher than the official one available?

It's not mandatory - unless libz.a uses some functionality only available in the new version of z.library. I think Fredrik Wikstrom is the author, so you had better ask him. Perhaps there is a good reason behind his decision.

That locks out every user who doesn't want to pay for the enhancer stuff.

I can assure you that the Enhancer project does not apply a policy to deliberately lock out users who don't own the Enhancer kit. However, certain components may rely on other Enhancer components, either because they provide some necessary functionality, or because A-EON wants to be in full control of its dependencies. Makes sense to me.
