Odyssey will always be slow on css heavy pages.

Take some news site for example, they do so much ad stuff in the background that it takes ages to load.

Even if you block the stuff it still gets compiled, it just doesn't show you the ads then.

As long as Odyssey is not updated to support some js/css jit it will only become slower as soon as more "modern" sites arrive.

And that is pretty much a dead end...we need a maintained browser (that can do css, js and html5)
