If that is the case, is there any point in making it a variable at all? The whole string will be localised anyway.

If so, then the change can be made in the catalog, no other changes will be needed. Just replace the %s with "OK" in the target language.

Indeed, would be fine aswell .. so the string will be just:

Quote:

A %s-reset is required before running the new version of AmiUpdate.\n\n\33c\33bThe reboot will happen after pressing ok.

I suggested to maintain the "variable" because i though you still want use it, but if there is no problem for you, then we can just avoid it at all and everything will be solved easily without any addition 😊
