But then, if you visit a page with video, you probabaly want to watch it ? And without let's say enabled webm, or ogg, you will have no ability to do so. But if you didn't visit those video pages, then it does not matter if things for media on or off, it will be the same by speed of odyssey usage.

In end, those options still will be there of course, and anyone will have a wish to not have video/audio played in browser can disable it easily.

I just fear, some ppls unpack it, run, and then just didn't have working video/audio in some parts think "damn crap, odyssey can't play them", and they surely will not thing that to have working video/audio, they need to enabled those options (which in all other browsers everywhere just default thing).
