It claims that PageStream 5.0 works with only "occasional problems."

I find it hard to believe. I was able to run the latest 68K version of PageStream 5 on my OS4 machine, but it required a massive stack, took ages to start, and locked up often. The OS4 build is not even there, and the Windows version of PgS 5 (while being the most complete of the range) is not 100% stable either.

I have a problem with articles like that because they create the impression that PageStream 5 is quality software, possibly enticing people into buying something that on numerous occasions has been proved to be scam. The article's final verdict that it's a "fully-featured professional grade software that can still compete with other platforms" is misleading, as are the following pieces of information from the PageStream website:

"PageStream 5.0 for the AmigaOS4 platform: This product is in-stock and ready for delivery."

Might be ready for delivery but definitely not ready for use.

"We here at GrasshopperLLC are continually trying to improve our products"

No, in fact they haven't updated their products in ten years.
