Is it possible to make it so you will have to open it one time (for the first "update" click), and then each other "update" click will refresh content in the already opened browser?

Yeah I wanted that too 😊 According to the launch handler docs, it's a single event where you instantly close the file handle that you use to launch the browser. I'll look to split the convert function into convert or "convert and launch". That way you can just use convert and then refresh the web browser window.
