Next, I got my new x1950 graphics card, and able to install the latest morphos and latest SDK on it (where they have GDB 8.3 port), and check if it can break/trace things: and it can. Everything works as expected.

Through, that point us to nowhere: it can be that morphos' kernel just has all things in place already for x5000. But from another side, we also can check morphos' diffs for gdb to see if there anything special for x5000 done.

I think it points us somewhere at least. Like you say, it probably works thanks to MorphOS itself, but it doesn't hurt to study the GDB patches. Was it Thomas that did the work on the current GDB?
