I've started to investigate how to incorporate this into adtools so that gdb is built per default when gcc and binutils is built.

Good!

If you have time you may also try to check our 2 issues: why newlib has "illegal seek" when we load the file in, while clib2 did not that, and why we have the "select ." command in a terminal in a row blocking terminal. The more people work on real coding issues the better :)
