I have to agree here. Licensing makes not much sense if you still need to invest a lot of time in porting. Then it would probably make more sense to do something from scratch and invest the money in it. But even if you do it one time and have something modern, it must be updated all the time. For that you need someone very skilled who does it for love and interest and hopefully keeps motivation or you pay for it but then you need somebody investing money in it for a long time. I doubt that anyone is willing and able to do that. In any case something changing as fast as a web browser is difficult for a small hobby niche with not much money to make and limited resources.
