At least for hardware: With being a beta-tester, you get discounts on buying the hardware, I guess this is some sort of payment for your work.

That's not always true, i.e. for the A1222 I paid more than the announced price. For the X1000 and X5000 sure, I paid less money, but we pre-ordered those machines even before they were manufactured. And we can discuss if that discount covers years of beta testing or not.

Don't get me wrong. My message is not a whining of lack of payments. It is more of a discussion if the companies that develop commercial products should pay the beta testers and all the people involved or should they go with open sourcing the products.
