Because it has a nicer ring to it then putting them in "Old Junk:"? :-p

Let's face it. The last majorish release was 4.1 FE. And that dates back 7 (!) years ago.

People complain about overwriting the old/legacy commands, classes and libraries with new ones. At least there's a clear seperation.

And let's be honest, every component can need an update, so the size of "legacy:" will shrink over time. Rather sooner than later if you ask me.

One might call it a new OS. I call it progress.

But it all starts with something bootable on new hardware that's unsupported by os4.1fe upd2.
