IIRC correctly there was already some work done (and screenshot shown) by an IBrowse dev be it Stefan or Robert so it can be done (and it's the way it is done in the (powerfull) graphical debugger 'ddd' under Linux). Do you know what happened to this initiative ?

GDB is powerfull we only need a reliable one which does not crash the system once and then while attaching to a process or while loading (or trying to) symbols of some system librairies. Then we will need a frontend for it.
