the crucial point is not to get the performances down at the same time.

While I have spent a lot of time trying to optimise it, I am leaving a few tricky optimisations until after I am happy there aren't any more bugs to be found.

So I don't forget to run it before installing new software, I would think.

AmiSystemRestore is designed to be left running in the background all the time... but you don't have to if (for some strange reason) you don't want to.
