It doesnt show icons in wb window. In shell it lists content though.

I actually saw a missing file this morning, but in both places. It had a ridiculously long filename, I've renamed it now but it must have been over the old 100 character limit. If I ever get around to implementing the new ExamineObject stuff it should fix that.

However, I don't think that's your problem - it's more likely that you simply have "show » only icons" set instead of "show » all files", although I'd have thought you would have checked that already? There's no difference between the way it returns the list of files to WB or the Shell (it doesn't even know), so it is impossible for one to be missing files that the other shows.

Dont know, how it handle firstname.lastname@emaildomain.com
:password@webdav.mediencenter.t-online.de:80 NAME Mediencenter

If username is form name@emaildomain.com

That works fine, or at least it does here.
