The installer is needed because there are question to ask to the user. For example, for ContextualMenu integration, for the path of course, for deficons replacement...

?? if fastview already is installed only the executable and readme has to be copied, hasn't it?

i mean there may be updates where some more settings need to be updated/adapted but in this case every one is free to use the complete installer. we're talking about updates of installed and working applications and not a complete installation.

if this is too complicated for mentioned applications then ok. i can keep on copying the executables manually - no problem. just thought it would be better to automate it.
