Nope, and not only because i build libicu with static data in and need to build some stub to avoid +17mb of binary (which is pretty much a lot), and because with new libicu which i build now, it mean new includes , and new names of functions with different prefix in compare with what i use previous, what in turn mean : recompile of almost whole odyssey with new icu includes again ! :)) feel the pain :) Recompile already starts and should be done tomorrow if nothing will going wrong with new icu includes. Then binary even with that useless 17mb libicudata should be done and later there will need only recompile libicu to be small, or maybe just to reuse that libicudata.a stub of 1kb, dunno for now.
